

Take care of the employer's tools and equipment as if they were our own

"A man (or woman) is only as good as his (or her) tools."

While a worker's skill and experience is vital to the job, keeping tools, whether they are your own or the company's makes all the difference when it comes to producing your best work. Electricians rely on their tools to keep them safe on the job too, and to ensure that the final result is safe for clients.

Tools that aren't handled with care can cause harm or create damage to the customer's equipment. It could also cause costly delays to projects, or extra work for others. It could also cause a company to lose money.

Lastly, taking care of employer's equipment is another sign of respect for your team and for your jobsite.

Refuse to condone any act of property destruction, including graffiti

When a client chooses a NECA/IBEW Local 48 company, they are putting their trust that the contractors will not only do the best and safest work, but that they will leave the worksite in the same condition – if not better – as when they started.

If you become aware of someone who has, or is planning on, ruining property it is your responsibility to report it immediately.

On top of refusing to participate in any destruction, you should encourage your coworkers to do the same as well – so that the hard work of NECA/IBEW Local 48 members does not become overshadowed by thoughtless destruction.
